Dear Phoenix Writers Club Members:

On behalf of Arizona State University, I am writing to congratulate the Phoenix Writers Club on its 100th anniversary. This auspicious occasion is a tribute to generations of writers with collaborative spirits and a desire to uplift one another, beginning with a group of very special women who demonstrated resilience, imagination, strength, and solidarity in 1926 by forming the club. In establishing this forum, they enriched our region, offering opportunities for fellow creatives to grow in their skill and camaraderie while generating meaningful work. I commend all of you for expanding their legacy and thank you for bettering our world by providing support and inspiration to colleagues; advancing literacy and literature; and promoting a culture of personal expression, skill, and fellowship. I wish each of you—and the Phoenix Writers Club—the very best.

Sincerely,

Michael Crow
