Congratulations on 100 Years!

Keeping a writers club going is no small feat.

It takes people who believe in each other's words. People who show up and cheer each other on. Dedicated volunteers who care enough to pass the club along stronger than they found it. It takes late nights, a lot of coffee, and collaboration.

Phoenix Writers Club has kept the light on for writers through the Great Depression, a world war, the rise of computers, a pandemic, and a Phoenix that has grown and changed in every possible way.

To the PWC founding women who built a place of their own and then swung their doors wide open for anyone brave enough to put words on a page, thank you.

You showed how much stronger a community is when everyone is welcome. You've also shown the enduring power of writers helping writers, one story, one meeting, and one generation at a time.

Here's to the next century.
